COLONIAL THEATRE. Lest in Midocean, Vitagraph Three-Reel Story of Titanic.

Today the Colonial theatre offers one of the most sensational film dramas of the year under the title of Lost in Midocean, or The Story of the Lost Titanic. This mammoth production is in three reels and tells of Leona Bryce, who meets Tagisha, a wealthy Japanese, at the embassy ball. Tagisha makes advances to Leona, but she repulses him. She is in love with an her, thinks she is in her stateroom.

The manages to get word to outsiders of her predicament and they send a wireless to her husband. She leaves of her predicament and they send a wireless to her husband. She leaves on the next steamer, but the unfortunate boat collides with an iceberg and nearly all are lost. Leona clings to wrecking and is eventually saved, but her husband, thinking her dead, becomes a recluse. Years later he reads in a paper of a strange woman risking her life to save a painting by him and, visiting the hospital where she is, finds to his joy that it is his long lost wife. This marvelous story is a complete and detailed story of the Titanic disaster, and no one can afford to miss it. It is for today only. Other big

VANISHED BARTH GODS

There are no gods to hear us; He hath taken our gods away The Prince of Air who hearkens The children scoff in the highways
And use His name for a jest;
And the high priests laugh and chatter and quaf.
And rule their lives like the rest.

He is not like us—He hears not,
Nor heedeth our utfered plea;
But the gods of the earth as mortals
had birth,
And they were fashioned as we.

The god of the rains and the rivers
Was strong, and we served him
aghast;
And we hushed our breath with the fear of death
When the lord of the night wind passed.

Messengers they, not judgea.

Nor measured the right and wrong:
But they heard our pleas in the winds and the seas.

And were swift to answer and strong.

Or that our prayers were righteens.
Or that our prayers were amiss,
Little they'd care, the spirits of air,
They answered, and judgment was
His! Still is He far beyond us.

Master and spirit of light;
And they who were near and fashioned to hear
Are gone, and now it is night!
